ALL GOING TO THE MASQUERADE

clans that in the very near future certain attorneys of this city will go to the supreme court and endeavor to have the direct primary law unconstitutional. They state that the law is unconstitutional the way it is drawn up, and that it will work a hardship on all office seekers and make it impossible for a poor man to seek an office. The direct primary law does away with conventions in this state and makes the nomination of candidates by the people directly possible. It is stated, though, that the people who framed it, or at least one of them, knew that it was unconstitutional when it was passed, and that it will never stand a test in the supreme court.

A CORRECTION
In yesterday morning's issue of this paper we printed a little poemlet from the pen of Edward N. Buck. Unfortunately a line was left out in the first stanza which ruined the sense and meter. As a correction the verses are republished in their entirety.

TWO PRESENTS
His present was a solitaire
Set in a hoop of gold,
Bearing its own sweet message.
But the note with it told—
"A Christmas gift for you!"
Hers was but a morris chair
For an idle hour's rest;
But the fuller import of the gift
She wrote in this behest—
"An all-year gift for two!"
—Edward N. Buck.

RENO ELKS ARE HAILED INTO COURT

The names of J. H. McCormick and H. J. Gosse, trustees of the Elks' lodge here, and S. M. Sample, exalted ruler of that order, were yesterday written in the detinue book at the police station by City Attorney McDowell as a sign that they were under arrest, charged with violating the ordinance against selling liquor without a license. In addition were the names of two porters employed by the club, who were also charged with a like offense.
All the men charged appeared before Police Judge Stanaway yesterday morning and were released to appear for trial on Monday, after they had entered a plea of not guilty to the charges.
At the trial Monday it is expected that the defendants will be represented by the leading attorneys of Reno and the case will be contested vigorously.
The language of the ordinance, however, seems to include clubs and the serving of liquors, and the distinction will be a matter of great legal ingenuity.—Reno Journal.

LOST AN ARM
A young man giving the name of Arthur Connolly, claiming to be a jockey who had been attending the races at Salt Lake City, and who was on his way to Emeryville, California, was run over by a locomotive in the Wells yards and frightfully injured. Connolly had alighted from a west bound freight train near the roundhouse and was walking down the track. At the same time a locomotive was backing down the track. The wind was blowing a gale, driving a blinding sheet of snow before it, and Connolly was unaware of the approach of the engine. Unable to save himself, he was rolled and dragged beneath the engine until his cries were heard by the engineer and the ponderous machine was brought to a standstill. Lying beneath the trucks of the pilot Connolly was found with his head between the wheels. It was found that his left arm had been run over and badly mangled. Dr. Olmsted amputated the arm and attended his other injuries.—Wells Herald.
